president and staff guide with concern

In a 1967 information brochure President Parks stated, "We will strive to retain, despite a steadily increasing number of students, our deep and genuine concern for the maximum educational development of each and every student."

Two years later, in 1969, President Parks and his administrative vice-presidents for Student Affairs, Business and Finance, Public Information, and Research still devote themselves to these goals. Yet, reaching those goals is a two-sided job; how much have we, the students, contributed?

robinson resigns: students ask why!

The statement read in part, "I have decided to resign the position of Dean of Students at Iowa State. . . ." It was signed Eugene Robinson.

Dr. Robinson, his associates, and his advisors deal with all policies that involve Iowa State students. When Dean Robinson resigned, the student body acted with concern. This reaction showed that the line of communication Dr. Robinson and his staff has developed between students and administration was and is definitely open.

residence department fills parental role

Director of Residence Charles Frederiksen has a huge family to care for. Mr. Frederiksen and his residence staff must take care of 8,000 residence hall students and 1,300 married student families.

The twelve member staff has to house, feed, and generally manage a majority of the student population. And like loving parents they take care of all money matters while keeping an eye on us through student government and Head Resident programming.

clinic faces aches, pains, and 'the pill'

"Only emergencies will be taken care of at other times" reads the bold-face message accompanying student health clinic hours. By emergency, Dr. Gail Proffitt and her University Hospital staff don't mean an ingrown toenail.

To date, Dr. Proffitt and her staff have faced campus furor over "the pill" and cases of Hong Kong flu and hepatitis. Much complaint is heard about the hospital until the complainers are the ones who need medical attention.

staff gives bomb new fire

Staff advisors Bob Johnson and Bob Greenlee, and editor Jan Faber are always ready with that old shot in the arm to keep things going.

It's common belief that the yearbook staff article is a sob story telling how little appreciated and rewarded the staff is. Well, this year we aren't going to tell you that we slaved long hours over this work of art; we aren't going to tell you that we sacrificed our pleasures to finish this book; No, we aren't going to tell you that we worked above ourselves at times to compile this history of ISU. But, we are going to tell you that we appreciate the work of everyone who made this book possible and hope you appreciate it as much.

The staff stayed on the good side of these shrewd businessmen, business manager Dick Johnson and assistant business manager Greg Carnwell as they helped issue the paychecks.

Three people who examine their work for unity are copy editor Doug Anderson, layout editor Ann Furnam, and art editor Denise Lambert.

When you notice your name in the index and take a look at the senior listings, remember seniors editor Ellen Seeck and index editors Mory Ellen Porter and Lyn Steinke.

Four people we couldn't have done without are managing editor Christie McKinley, sports editors Bruce Fritz and Kurt Magnusson, and managing photo editor Jone Whicher.

Incoming Editor Kent Boker gives his predecessor Greg Lauser a knowing look as they rack their brains for yet another euphemistic four-letter word cover up.

f--l l-ng--g- runs daily ship amuck and/or aground

Daily backshop workers provide invaluable composition work which is exhibited each morning the Daily is printed. Tom Dunkar (left) and Duane Card are preparing a page reproduction for the offset camera located in Jefferson, Iowa, 40 miles from the backshop.

The Daily's stand on the use of four-letter words winter quarter highlighted Greg Lauser's tenure in office and created a statewide sc--del. Lauser chose to spell out all expletives used by persons at public meetings when they were the central issue of a news story. He subsequently had spelled out for him various and sundry reasons why these words weren't acceptable in print.

Despite this dubious highlight the Daily provided coverage of the menagerie of events taking place throughout the year at the Moo U. Zoo. Among the strangest animals to visit the campus this year was a precedent-setting student demonstration supporting the University's dean of students. Normally the object of students' scorn, the dean of students at Iowa State became a martyr of academic freedom at the hands of protestors led by "straight" man Dennis Forsyth, GSB President. The Daily came through with a typically intelligent question, "WHY?"

Overall it was a year of change for the Daily. The journalism department must have seen the "Good Ship Lollipop" going down for the third time because it pulled all its troops, alias 222 reporters, off the boat. The "Lollipop" may now assume the role of an all-day "sucker."

In an attempt to avoid a sellout to any local candy manufacturers, the ship changed helmsmen this spring. This last spring Kent Baker took over with every intention of reforming the Daily's image as "The Flying Dutchman"—or everybody's nightmare. With the exit of 222ers from the staff, Baker is left in midstream without anyone to paddle; but we have every confidence he will carry on admirably.

Terry Staffer, left, Business Manager Fall Quarter, and Tony Flickinger, current Business Manager, discuss the intricacies of making that two column, four inch ad fit into a two column, three inch hole. It can and has been done.

Denny Forsyth had a hard act to follow as GSB president.

GSB had its hand in many pies this year. To start on a brisk note, GSB scrutinized the Daily to determine if it was a student paper. The Pueblo and racial crises were studied and commented on. An attempt was made to give the faculty and students a bigger hand in operation of the physical plant. These and other legislative proposals were the work of president, Denny Forsyth, vice president, Bill Gilbert, and representatives from every college and major residence group. Oh yes, GSB also proposed to cut all Bomb funds for this year. If they had, we couldn't have printed this delightful article.

army rotc strives for new degree of professionalism

The Iowa State Army ROTC Brigade started the school year by welcoming a new Professor of Military Science, Col. Robert B. Barnett. Col. Barnett and the cadet officers are, this year, striving for a new degree of professionalism in the ROTC program. It is Iowa State's goal to graduate the best trained officers.

Incentives to obtain peak performance include drill awards, Scabbard and Blade, Pershing Rifles, Society of American Military Engineers, and pistol and rifle teams. The Brigades "Black Beret" Counter-Insurgency unit offers the really "gung-ho" cadet an opportunity for extra training in simulated combat situations. This unit has achieved great proficiency and esprit de corps through all its extra activities.

The Brigade, through its activities during Homecoming and Veishea, is striving for a more active part in all major university functions.

ocean cruises for nrote

The purpose of the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps is to train men to become qualified officers in the Navy or Marine Corps. This is accomplished through instruction in essential military subjects, education received from the University, and exposure to the military way of life and social customs.

Each midshipman completes one or several "summer cruises" in which he experiences, first hand, the life of an officer. The cruise areas span the oceans from Viet Nam to the Mediterranean.

Activities centered around the University community are also important. Midshipmen are active in everything from Navy intramural, to the Drill team, to the Order of the Sextant, which sponsored this year's social highlight, "Blue Lagoon."

Drill is an integral part of Corps Training, but it is only one part.

With new officers in charge of the program at Iowa State, many changes have been made in AFROTC, but the goal remains the same—the commissioning of officers for the United States Air Force.

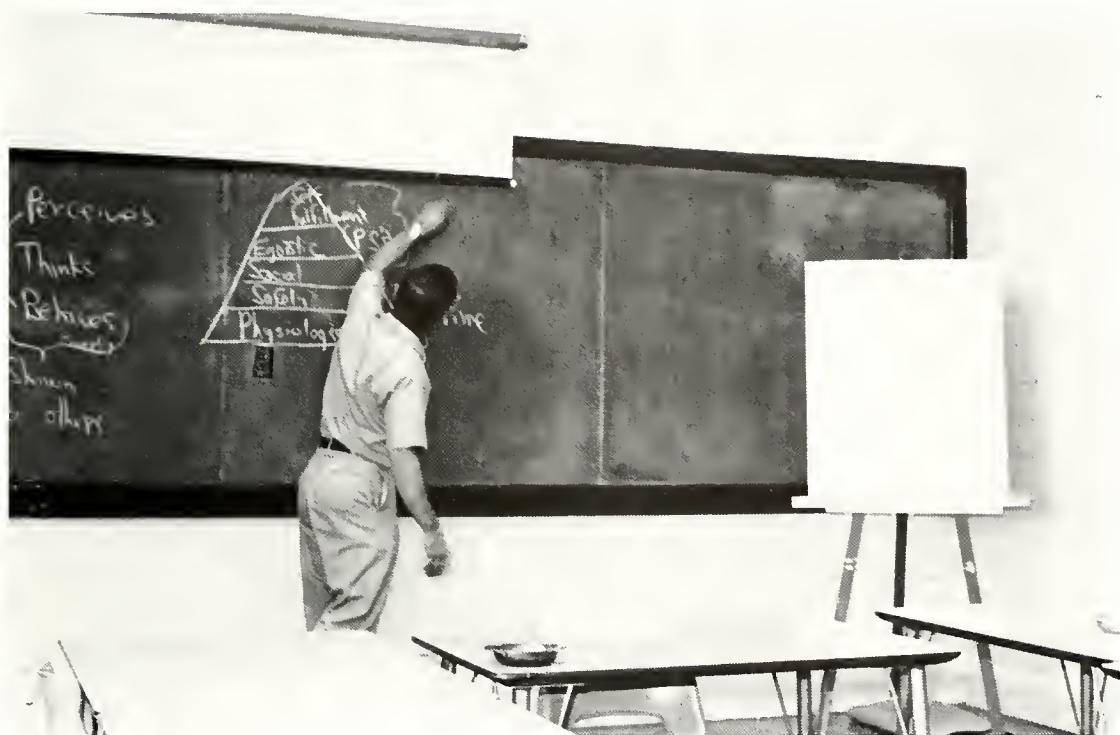

Cadets are taught the role of the military in today's changing world. But the classroom and the drill field are not the only aspects of AFROTC. Cadets are encouraged to take part in the many activities available, ranging from Dining-Ins and Military Balls to picnics and athletic events.

Seniors in AFROTC have a unique opportunity to learn to fly. The Flight Instruction Program (FIP) offers those qualified cadets the chance to earn their civilian pilot's licenses while in school.

Cadet Colonel Jeff Downing takes part in the FIP for Seniors.

Cadet Roger Epley briefs his classmates on management problems.

The coed ratio at Iowa State is large enough that if a guy looks hard he will see at least one girl per week. The main organization for 2500 coeds is the Women's Residence Association. Through the grouping of 50 houses, the girls are on an equal level with the men. The WRA governing body is exactly the same as for the male residences, and its opinion carries the same amount of weight. Participation runs just as high for coed scholarship, sports, and activities. Yet, there are a few basic differences between men and women on campus, and thank goodness!

What are roommates for if not to make sure you get to the formol on time?

The WRA is sometimes taken for granted, but its members are really the living end.

tra expands its open hours policy

There aren't too many wells around campus to run dry, but whenever you're thirsty, the milk machine is always empty.

It is times like these when a guy starts to appreciate his mother a lot more.

Meanwhile, back at the Towers, its 1800 occupants aren't just sitting around. Men from Storms, Knapp, and Wallace halls can also claim an outstanding open hours policy. The long walk down Welch, the lake around Wallace hall and the ever removed position haven't dampened the spirits of Towers occupants. Many areas of campus life have felt their growing pains. TRA men participate in all phases of campus activity and even set a few precedents, like cutting Bomb funds. The Towers is also run by an executive board, with assistance from the presidential forum and senate.

Whether studying, reading, sleeping, or —well you know— the Towers lounge cannot be beat.

mra opens hours and basement to coeds

Keeping up on world events is a college must.

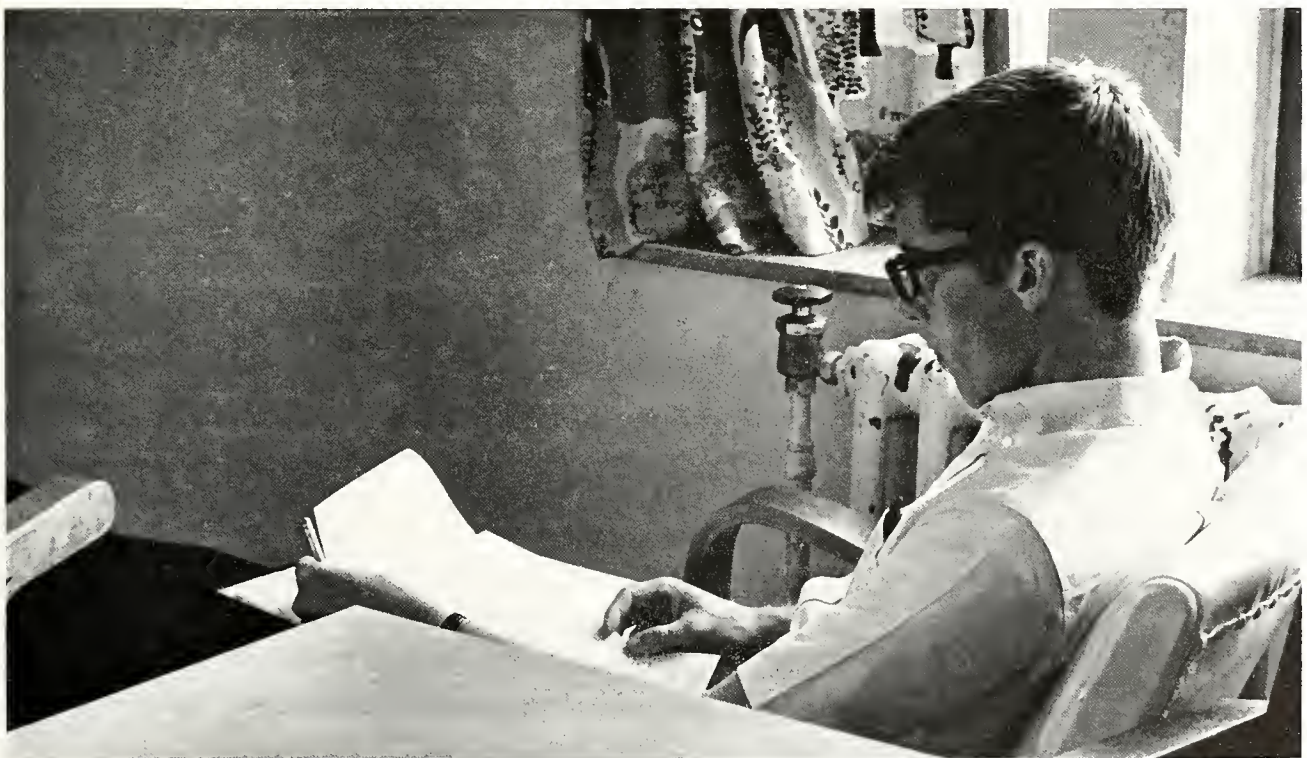

The sound of music is a big part of dorm life.

Those timely messages pop up everywhere.

Like the civil war division of north and south, the men's residences have split into the North Men's Residence Association and the Towers Residence Association. Their competition is keen for prominence in scholarship, athletics, and activities. Yet, the NMRA is definitely ahead in two categories; walking distance to campus and closeness to ISU coeds, who reside in Helser basement.

The NMRA is comprised of Friley and Helser halls with approximately 2,500 men in 44 houses. It is run by an executive council and representatives of each house who, among their many accomplishments, can boast about the most liberal open hours policy around.

It may not be the Hilton, but it's home sweet home.

If one were to walk past the doorway of Room 42 in the Memorial Union he would be likely to think that a "cyclone" struck; or is it a zoo? All appearances aside, it is really the headquarters of the Independent Students Association. In this one office, however, devious minds have schemed and plotted such functions as the nation's first IBM dance, which is now an annual affair. Another project of great interest is working with high school students of the Model Cities Program in Des Moines.

The total purpose behind ISA is to give the unaffiliated student the best representation possible on and off campus.

It looks empty now, but wait until there are about two-hundred people gathered in the office at the same time.

Dean Flayd Andre heads the largest College of Agriculture in the United States.

The graduates of the College of Agriculture are concerned with the use of biological resources. While the popular conception of an agriculturist is "farmer," agricultural production is only one of four major fields in the college at Iowa State. Also included are agricultural business, agricultural science, and resource use.

Like the Engineering College, Agriculture has tended to make wider use of Sciences and Humanities elective courses to broaden its educational base. As world population increases, the graduates of the College of Agriculture will need to draw more and more on their liberal education to meet the challenge of feeding, clothing, housing, and providing pleasant surroundings for millions of people.

Dr. George Town is the dean of one of the most respected Engineering Colleges in the country.

Engineering is the application of scientific principles and discoveries to practical consumption. Thus almost without exception engineering graduates are employed improving the standards of living of society. Engineers develop economical means of food production, transportation, sanitation, power production, communication, building construction, and manufacture of all the other "necessities" of modern life. As one staff member put it, "Without engineers we'd still be digging acorns out of the forest."

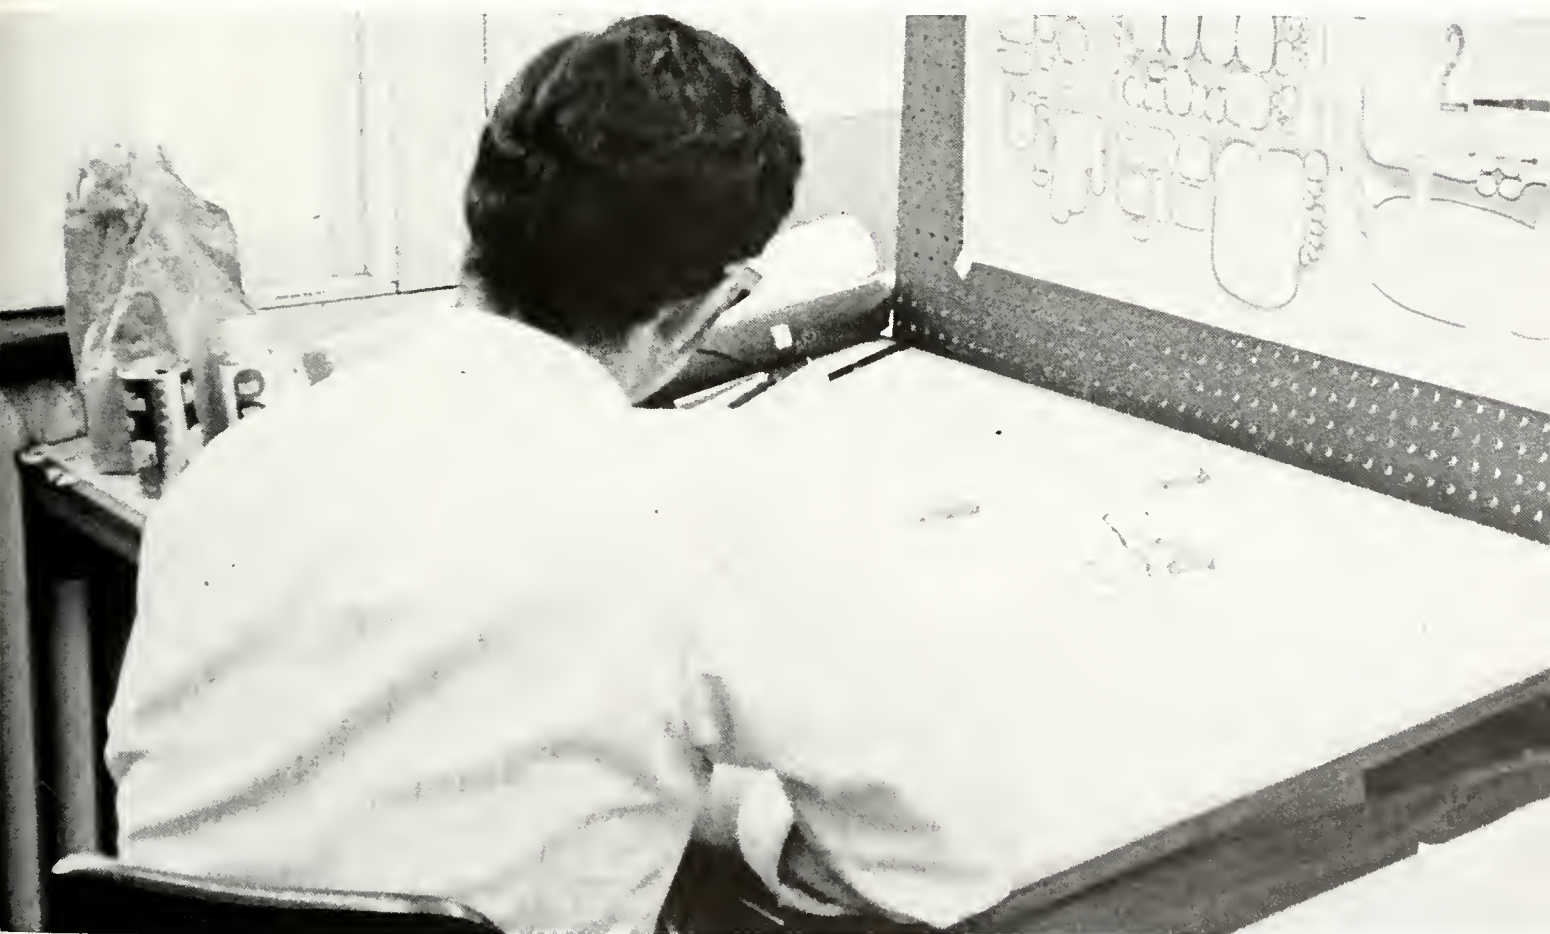

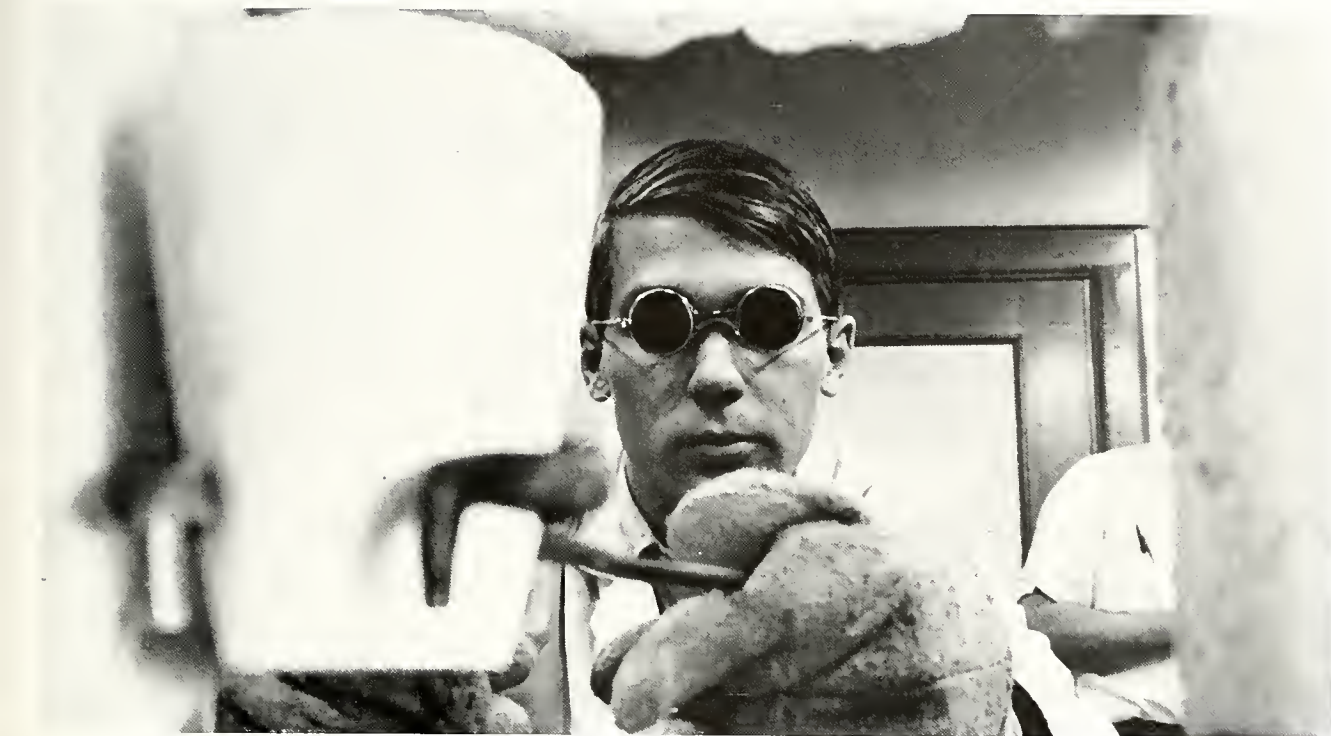

Engineers thrive on change; they produce it. They have mastered the process of technical change and are turning now to social change. Some even quietly suggest that Iowa State's "New Humanism" should begin by having humanists learn a little more about Technology.

Firing chemical mixtures is an often repeated detail to the ceramic engineering student.

Unlike most engineering students, the architects spend many hours at the drafting board.

home ec college covers wide range of studies

"We see students of Home Economics as concerned about the improvement of individuals and families," said Associate Dean Julia Faltinson. Broadly speaking, some economists apply science—social, physical, and biological—to improved solutions of the basic human needs.

Actually, the name of the department is no longer truly descriptive; graduates now often go into teaching, social work, or business. These people are the engineers of the social sciences.

Knowing the specifics of human needs isn't adequate for Home Economics graduates, particularly those in educational occupations. As the old saying goes, "You can lead a horse to water. . . ." To solve this problem the college supplies heavy concentrations of study in the social sciences and family resource management. These studies are augmented by field trips and interdepartmental courses to give the student a more complete understanding of the situation. The combination lives up to its goal of providing leaders in the broad field of Home Economics.

Dean Chalmers Roy has a large role in developing New Humanism at Iowa State.

s and h offers broad-based program

"He'll outgrow his job in ten years," says Dean Roy of the Sciences and Humanities graduate. His career will be in an occupation related to the basic disciplines: physical or life sciences, social sciences, mathematics, or languages. The forward rush of knowledge, however, will radically change the circumstances in which he works.

The College of Sciences and Humanities provides a broad-based education to allow its graduates to adapt to the changing world.

"People who are going to be adaptable," says the Dean, "will have to be literate—in their own language, in mathematics, in science, and to some extent in someone else's language.

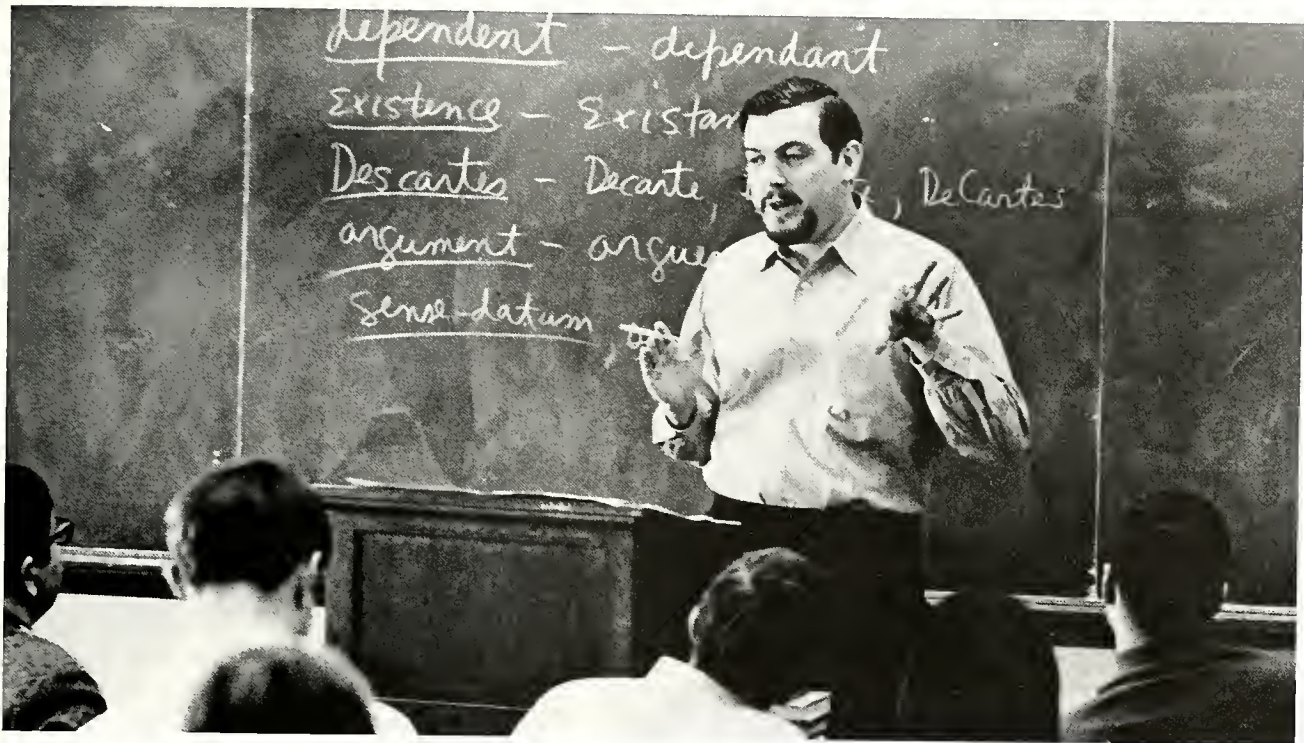

"In my time," he continued, "education was not as good as it is today. Students now have a better base from which to adapt, but, of course, their adaptation will have to be more rapid."

federal funds requested for new complex

Despite their very limited facilities, Iowa State's College of Veterinary Medicine accepts 75 new students each year. Those that make it through the rough curriculum are granted a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree.

Not all of them become animal doctors, since about a third of the veterinarians in the U.S. are employed in such occupations as meat inspection, sanitation and public health, and pharmaceutical research and production. Those who do practice medicine are concerned with both the treatment and prevention of diseases in animals used for food production and for pets. Recent developments in the field include work in marine biology and oceanography, the large scale use of animals in laboratories, and comparative animal medicine—using animals as models for the study of human ailments. With their professional education, Veterinarians take a prominent role in community leadership as well as in safeguarding the community's health.

Dean R. L. Kitchell is looking forward to the College's new facility to be built on South Beach Avenue.

Vet students have to be on top of their work, but not generally to this extent.

A few women enter the college each year, but it is still dominated by men.

graduate school challenges the unknown

Graduate education at Iowa State and across the nation is one of the fastest growing fields in academics. Enrollment in ISU's Graduate College has doubled in the last eight years, according to Dean J. Boyd Page, despite continually rising entrance standards. Many students find that a bachelor's degree is no longer enough to qualify them for some professions.

Graduate education differs from undergraduate studies in two particulars: grad students move from learning what is already known to learning how to find new knowledge. There are no long lists of required courses; instead, each student is encouraged to pursue some original investigation. In Iowa, ISU is known primarily for its undergraduate activities, but, according to Dean Page, almost anywhere in the world the University is recognized for its fine program of graduate education.

Grad students are continually on the move, but how many recognize the fruits of their labor?

It may look like a homemade still, but rest assured this chemistry filtration process won't produce moonshine.

At last, we know what's on the minds of our Botany grads.

research makes college a university

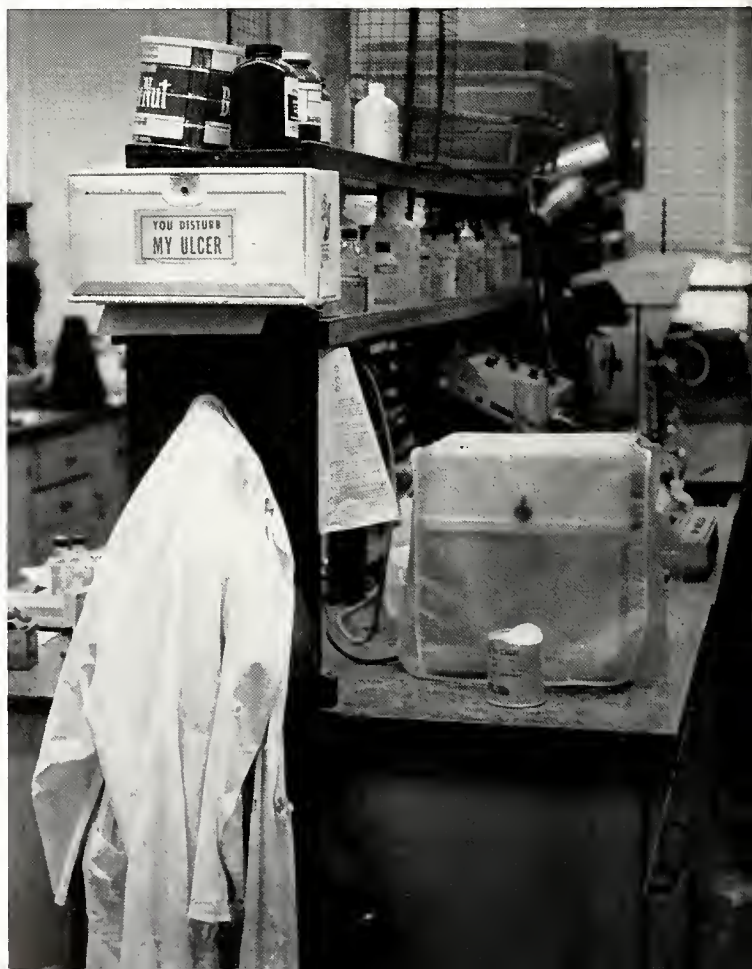

Behind this door lies port of the world's future.

Most people are reluctant to realize it, but research and the accompanying graduate education are what a university is all about. Without them, says Dean Page, you don't have a university; you have just a college. Under these criteria, Iowa State certainly qualifies as a university; research is a $2.5 million dollar a month activity here. Research projects range from studies of the crystalline structure of the rare earth metals to investigations of the effectiveness of pictorial communications.

Research at a university serves three purposes. Since most investigations are performed at least in part by graduate students, the research provides an educational tool. Results of the research are published and eventually find their way into practical application, serving society. Finally, research on campus feeds the undergraduate educational system the latest information, keeping it vital and up to date.

When a researcher's first line of attack fails, he must hang up his coat, get away from it all, and find a new approach.

If you think this three-day old mouse used in genetics research is big, you should see its mother.

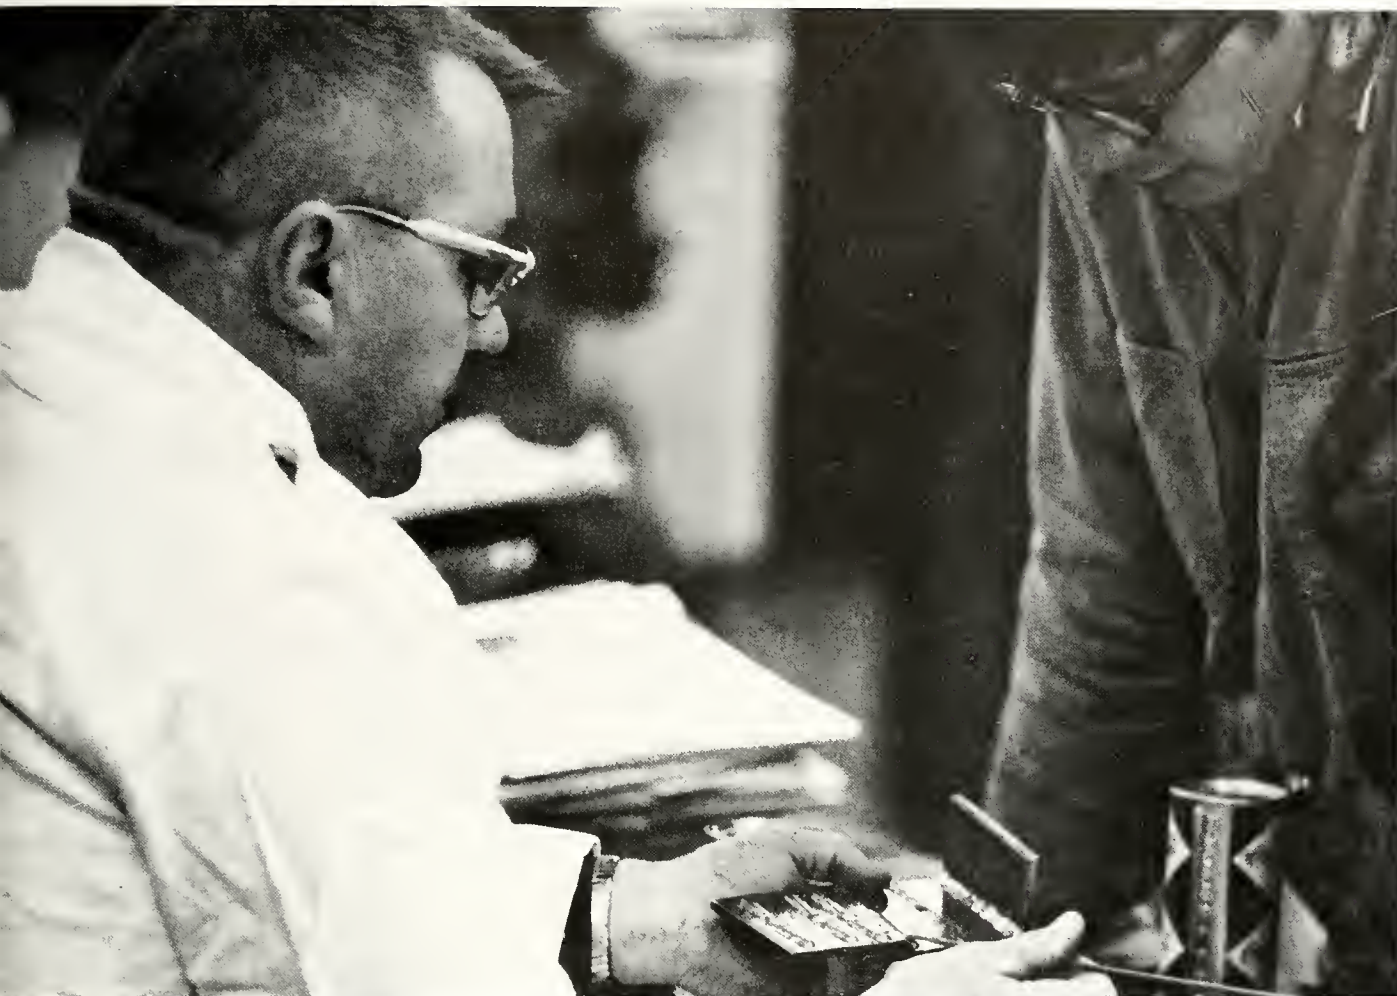

Shades of Frankenstein, but this strange brew could be a vital step in solving one of man's many problems.

A tech student takes pains to make his welding the art that it is.

No matter how you define it, this student definitely has a grinding job.

A vital part of any course is that deep, sometimes philosophical, instructor criticism.

tech students take four years in two

Technicians are the doers of modern society. They are concerned with the application of methods and techniques to the problems of industry and agriculture, rather than with the development of new concepts; in this capacity they implement the designs of the engineers and scientists with whom they work.

Iowa State's Technical Institute provides education for technicians in agriculture, engineering, and food service management. The programs require two years of study and fill a vital gap in the educational demands of the economy.

Learning meats from the outside is an important step of the ag. tech courses.
